SECTION A

Read carefully the passage below and answer the questions that follow.

In this passage the pupils are on a week's school trip to Whitby. Fliss and Lisa are friends and on the previous night Fliss had a frightening experience in her bedroom. It opens at breakfast time the following morning.

- 1 They gathered in the lounge after breakfast. Mr Hepworth had fixed a large map of the
- 2 coast to the wall. He pointed. "Here's Whitby, where we are. And here," he slid his
- 3 finger northward along the coastline, "is Staithes, where the coach will drop us this
- 4 morning. Staithes used to be an important fishing port like Whitby, and there are still a
- 5 few fishermen there, but it is a quiet village now. Captain Cook worked in a shop at
- 6 Staithes when he was very young before he decided to be a sailor."
- 7 "Will we be going in the shop, Sir?"
- 8 "No, Neil Atkinson, we will not. Unfortunately it was washed away by the sea a long
- 9 time ago. However, if we are very lucky we might see a ghost."
- 10 There were gasps and exclamations at this. "Captain Cook's ghost, Sir?" asked James
- 11 Garside. The teacher shook his head, smiling. "No, James. Not Captain Cook's. A
- 12 young girl's. There's a dangerous cliff at Staithes, a crumbling cliff, and the story goes
- that when this girl was walking under it one day, a chunk of rock fell and decapitated her.
- Who knows what decapitated means? Yes, Steven Jackson?
- "Sir, knocked her cap off, Sir."
- 16 "No, Michelle Webster?"
- 17 "Squashed her, sir?"
- "Closer, but not right. Ellie-May Sunderland?"
- "Sir, knocked her head off, Sir."
- 20 "Correct." He leaned forward, peering at the girl through narrowed eyes. "Are you all
- 21 right, Ellie-May you look a bit pasty?"
- 22 "Yes, Sir."
- 23 "Sure?"
- 24 "Yes, Sir."
- 25 "Right. Well, there's a bridge over a creek at Staithes, and that's where the headless
- 26 ghost has been seen. We'll be having a look round the village, then walking along the
- 27 clifftop to Runswick Bay. That's here." He jabbed at the map again. A boy raised his
- 28 hand.
- 29 "What is it, Robert Field?"
- 30 "How far is it Sir?"
- 31 The teacher shrugged, smiling. "A few miles. We'll find somewhere to eat our packed
- 32 lunches along the way, and the coach will be waiting at Runswick to bring us back here.
- Right it's a lovely sunny morning, so let's get started."
- Lisa saved Fliss a seat on the coach. As they roared along the coast road, she said, "We
- 35 stayed awake in our room ever so late last night, talking. Telling jokes and all that. It was
- 36 brilliant."
- You were all asleep before midnight though," said Fliss.
- 38 "How d'you know?"
- 39 "I passed your door at midnight. There wasn't a sound."
- 40 "What were you doing, passing our door at midnight?"

- 41 "I went to the toilet. Or at least I think I did."
- 42 "How d'you mean, you think you did don't you know?"
- 43 Fliss pulled a face. "No. It's all mixed up with this horrible dream I had."
- "What was it about, your dream?"
- 45 Fliss told her friend about the strange noises that had seemed to come from the linen
- cupboard, the number thirteen on the door, the footsteps she thought she'd heard later.
- 47 "It all seemed so real, Lisa. But then this morning I looked, and of course there was no
- 48 number on the door and the sun was shining and everybody was shouting and messing
- 49 about on the landing, and it didn't seem real any more. D'you know what I mean?"
- 50 Lisa nodded. "Sure. It was all a dream you didn't go to the toilet and you weren't
- outside our door at midnight so you don't know what time we went to sleep, right?"
- 52 "Right. Except -"
- 53 "Except what, Fliss? What is it?"
- 54 "After the toilet, I dreamed I washed my hands, right? And it was one of those spurty
- 55 taps where the water comes all at once and goes everywhere. Some went on the floor.
- Quite a lot, in fact. There didn't seem to be anything to mop it up with, and anyway I
- was too scared to hang about so I left it."
- 58 Lisa shrugged. "Dream water in a dream bathroom. So what?"
- 59 Fliss looked at her friend. "It was still there this morning."
